ANDREWS BACK IN POLITICAL GAME IN NEW MEXICO THIS FALL

Veteran Politician is Saying Nothing but His Friends Insist that He go After Republican Nomination.

SAYS ROOSEVELT IS NEXT G. O. P. NOMINEE

Former Delegate Thinks Nothing can Stop the Colonel's Return to Ranks of Regulars and that Tariff is the Issue.

That William H. Andrews, former delegate in congress, the most influential Republican in the final successful fight for statehood, and who was urgently and unmercifully ditched for the United States Senate for which he had worked long and hard, by the men now in control of the Republican state machine, is preparing quietly but with his usual methodical system, to "come back" to active politics in the state, is the general opinion expressed by Mr. Andrews' close friends in Albuquerque. On his return to Albuquerque Monday from Carlsbad where he is drilling for oil, Mr. Andrews told a reporter for The Herald that he hadn't a thing to say. He was a business man engaged in drilling for valuable oil which he earnestly believes is under the ground in the vicinity of Carlsbad and which he proposes to get if his company has to go through the earth's third dimension. He was ready to talk about oil, but no politics. He has since maintained that attitude, telling his friends and the newspapers that everything he had to say politically at this time had been said in an interview which he gave to the Morning News at Roswell last week.

But while he refuses to talk himself, the veteran politician's friends are ready enough to talk for him and each and every one of them says he must go in for the Republican nomination for congress and that when the time comes he will go in, and that he will upset the present Republican machine in the state, ditch its leaders, as they ditched him in the battle for the senate, and take charge of the party's fortunes. The machine may say Mr. Andrews would be licked to a stand-still in the race for congress this fall. Andrews' friends say he is the only Republican in the state who stands a ghost of a show to beat Congressman Ferguson.

Believing that the tariff is the issue and Roosevelt the only possible candidate with whom the Republicans can hope to succeed, Mr. Andrews is sticking to the colonel as the one best bet. He was for Roosevelt when the big bust came at Chicago, but refused to bolt the party. This attitude is causing leaders on both sides of the Republican fence to sit up and worry, because it is recognized as quite possible that if Andrews does start, there will be a considerable assemblage of Johnson leaders in both the stand pat and Progressive ranks. The Andrews platform and future political course as outlined in the interview which he gave to the Roswell newspaper last week, and which follows:

What Andrews Thinks Will Win.

"The Democratic party is a good party of opposition," declared the former delegate, "but its theories are economically wrong, therefore, under the most favorable circumstances, can not fail to bring disaster to the country when it is in power. But I will give them credit for deviling a good banking law which should have been placed on the statute books by the Republicans when they adjusted the free silver controversy.

"But it is on the tariff that the Democrats fall. Those from the south have not yet learned that things have changed since the time of John C. Calhoun. They still believe that cotton is king and that it is raised by slave labor. In the north their politicians take the free trade text book on political economy for their authority, and because free trade is taught as a theory for ideal conditions, they fail to understand that we are situated differently from England.

"Now to illustrate," said the senator, "the country was enjoying unprecedented prosperity under the administration of Taft and the operations of the Payne-Aldrich law. Labor was employed at the highest wages ever paid in the world and mills and mines were working three shifts and then were not able to supply the demands.

"After the election of Wilson and a Democratic senate, thus turning over the whole country to the Democrats, the newspapers and chambers undertook to apply Christian Science principles to the business of the country. They all predicted prosperity. It was certain they would be mistaken, but kept my opinions to myself to avoid being called a calamity howler.

"The proof has come all too soon. Less than 15 per cent of the labor is employed now. The work done formerly by the American laboring man now is being done by the foreigner. Our imports are climbing rapidly and our exports are decreasing month by month. Instead of having a balance of trade in our favor of nearly seven hundred million dollars, as was the case at the end of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1912, the last three months shows barely $21,000,000 exports over the imports, or for the next fiscal year from July 1, 1914. It is doubtful if we have more than a hundred millions to the good, as we are now proceeding at the rate of about ten million a month, only each month shows a decrease over the preceding month. It may be the balance in our favor will vanish entirely."

"But," he was asked, "may not a country be prosperous and import more than it exports? That is the case with England."

The old politician studied for a few moments and said: "Are you aware that England is drawing interest and dividends from the ends of the earth? Do you understand that Great Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, and Holland have been furnishing money for nearly a century to other countries where development was needed, as ours?"

"Let me illustrate," said Mr. Andrews. "Take one of your local money lenders. He buys much more than he sells. He may sell nothing, he has capital invested that is bringing him interest. Maybe he has bank stocks or other dividend paying stocks in addition to his notes and mortgages. He doesn't have to be a producer. His capital works for him. So it is with England and all other countries of large capital invested abroad. We do not belong to that class. We are young and have had to borrow millions of dollars from abroad.

"The result is," said the senator, "when the balance of trade is not heavily in our favor our gold has to be shipped abroad to pay our balance, which will in time drain us of money."

When asked who, he believed, would be the next Republican nominee, Senator Andrews replied: "Probably one Theodore Roosevelt. He is in harmony with the cardinal principles of the Republican party. He is a great leader and a great man, though a bit erratic at times in his talk, but have you ever noticed that he is conservative when it comes to action?" Some parts of his Progressive platform will be incorporated in the platform of the Republican party, and some of it will allow to pass over until later date in order not to complicate the main issue of a protective tariff and prosperity in the next campaign.

"Roosevelt is too wise a politician not to understand that the issue on which the next campaign will be fought has been made already. He could not make another if he were to try. He will not try. He talks of theories and experiments, but when it comes to action he is intensely practical. He is the logical man for the Republicans to nominate for the presidency in 1916, and he will be elected by an overwhelming popular majority and will have at least two-thirds of the votes of the electoral college.

"Young n-n," said Mr. Andrews as he rose to go, "take it from me, the country has got to get back to the principle of protection and the encouragement of business, before the wheels will begin to turn again. True, New Mexico wool men are getting high prices, which is the London price, because the wool crop was short last year, not only in this country but in Australia and South Africa, is high everywhere. It will not be high under free trade when there is a little time to recuperate, in those foreign countries, from the drought that has prevailed for the past two years in some, one of them all the time. It is fortunate for our wool men that their competitors have had calamity, but we cannot go on the theory that such calamities will con-
